

Miss Tucker's Revenge

By ESTHER VANDEVEER

Worthington was an excellent fellow, but thoughtless about treading on other persons' toes. He would not hurt any one's feelings intentionally, but unintentionally was always blundering. It is a question which kind of person is the least objectionable, the selfish person or the unselfish person who has not the sensibility to see that he is wounding some one.

Worthington was getting to an age when he wished for a home, and every one knows that a man can't make a home without a woman, else it would be like a body without a soul. One evening a married lady friend of his said to him:

"Jim, I know a girl who would suit you exactly."

"Does she wish to get married?"

"What a question!"

"Why do you say that?"

"Every girl wishes to marry; at least that is her natural part in life, and she prefers to fulfill it."

"Oh!"

"Would you like me to introduce you?"

"I should be greatly obliged if you would."

Now, such matters should be managed with consummate tact. This one was managed with no tact at all. The introducer told the girl, Miss Helen Tucker, that she had a husband picked out for her. The consequence was that when the pair were introduced each knew the purpose of the introduction. The girl treated Jim as cordially as she could under the circumstances, which were not conducive to cordiality. Jim looked the girl over and made up his mind that he did not want her. After a brief and embarrassing visit he departed with no effort whatever to divest Miss Tucker of the opinion she had formed that she had been turned down. It did not occur to him that she would feel slighted.

Five years passed. Jim was still unmarried. He had never seen Miss Tucker since the single call he had made on her, and the incident had entirely slipped out of his mind. Not so the lady he had turned down. She was nursing a wound in her bosom that pained her perpetually. One night she met Worthington at a ball. She was eighteen when she met him before; now she was twenty-three. Worthington was thirty-four. One glance at him told her that he did not remember her. Her heart beat wildly, but she turned away from him in time to prevent his seeing it. A burning desire was in her bosom; that desire was for revenge.

Turning again to Worthington, she threw a look of admiration into her eyes that he had not seen in the eyes of any other woman. Blind before to his attractions, he suddenly discovered them in the worshipful look of this woman. He talked to her and made another discovery—that he was a very interesting man. When the two parted the lady half repressed a sigh, as though she could not bear the separation. He asked permission to call, and it was granted with a happy smile.

Miss Tucker feared that her fish would learn who she was before she could land him. Fortunately her dwelling had been changed. Her name remained the same. But there was no fear of the latter giving her away. Worthington remembered only one Tucker, his tailor. In a week Worthington had been hooked; in a month he was passionately in love. He sought an opportunity to propose, but Miss Tucker foiled him. She believed she had nine-tenths of his heart, and she wished the other tenth. When she had got this, too, she wanted to squeeze every drop of blood out of it.

At last, when she found that she couldn't frown at him without bringing signs of collapse, she let him tell her how he loved her. While he was getting it out—he labored like a donkey engine pulling a coal train—she cast her eyes demurely on the floor. Then suddenly she raised them to him cold as a January sky and asked him what in the world she was doing to cause him to mistake an ordinary friendship for love.

When Worthington left the house he staggered down the steps, and it seemed to him that the sidewalk was an abyss with no bottom. He went to his desolate room and sat all night staring at vacancy. During the next day while he was pacing the floor with a wild look in his eye the postman came and brought him a note from his refuser. She expressed regret at his mistake, wondering if after all he had failed to recognize in her the Miss Tucker he had met five years before, they having been introduced with matrimonial intent. She had been ready then to say yes. Since then her taste had changed. She was, oh, so sorry!

This was doubling a load already unbearable. Worthington looked upon the world before him as a prisoner on the way to Siberia views the trackless snows before him, remembering the Kara mines at the other end of the journey.

Remembering the friend who had introduced him to Miss Tucker, he called on her and told her his heartrending story.

"You treated her brutally when I introduced you," she said.

This was the unpardonable sin.

However, the lady saw Miss Tucker and brought Worthington the glad news that if he would penance do he might hope some day to kiss the tip of her finger. Having taken her revenge, Miss Tucker consented to become Mrs. Worthington.

SAVES DAUGHTER

Advice of Mother no Doubt Prevents Daughter's Untimely End.

Ready, Ky.—"I was not able to do anything for nearly six months," writes Mrs. Laura Bratcher, of this place, "and was down in bed for three months."

I cannot tell you how I suffered with my head, and with nervousness and womanly troubles.

Our family doctor told my husband he could not do me any good, and he had to give it up. We tried another doctor, but he did not help me.

At last, my mother advised me to take Cardui, the woman's tonic. I thought it was no use for I was nearly dead and nothing seemed to do me any good. But I took eleven bottles, and now I am able to do all of my work and my own washing.

I think Cardui is the best medicine in the world. My weight has increased, and I look the picture of health."

If you suffer from any of the ailments peculiar to women, get a bottle of Cardui today. Delay is dangerous. We know it will help you, for it has helped so many thousands of other weak women in the past 50 years.
